Miners turning blue in support of mental health

Tackling mental health in mining is high on the agenda for Premier Coal Mine and to show its support the operation has painted a rear dump haul truck tray bright blue.

With 370 people working onsite, raising awareness about mental health is critical to the operation and during a recent tray overhaul, the decision was made to paint the tray bright blue to help bring some attention to this vital issue.

Premier Coal Operations Manager Jim Falconer was proud to help raise awareness about mental health.

“The health and well-being of our people is an absolute priority for our operation.

“Painting the haul truck tray bright blue is a symbol of our support for our people and their work in Collie, and we hope it not only raises awareness but also encourages important conversations about mental health.

“We are already hearing positive comments from our people about this bold colour change as it’s hard to miss across the open cut site,” said Jim.
