Gulgong Show draws a crowd

Around 3,000 people flocked through the gates over the weekend at the annual Gulgong Show and Moolarben Coal was proud to be a major sponsor for another year.

The Gulgong Show is always a great family event with activities and displays for all ages and Gulgong community members were thrilled with the success of another fantastic show on Saturday 21 February.

Rose Jackson, Treasurer of the Gulgong Show Society recognised the joy the show brought to the local community.

“A lot of planning, thought and time goes into putting the show together. Local farmers prepare year-round to showcase their best sheep, goats and horses and poultry exhibits plan to show an array of chickens, ducks, and other birds.

“The produce pavilion always bursts with colour with prizes for best vegetables, fruit displays, preserves, jams, and home cooking.

“The Horticulture section was a celebration of artistry. Daffodils, roses and native flora were arranged in creative displays, while garden-grown produce such as giant pumpkins, straight carrots, and glossy tomatoes were on display for the envy of those who cannot grow them.

“The show also showcased local artists, photographers, jewellery and crafts. The show has something for everyone of all ages and guarantees some family fun.

“We are run by volunteers and rely heavily on financial support from local businesses, so we are thankful to Moolarben Coal for their donation.

“We are already thinking about next year’s show and look forward to bringing everyone together again,” said Rose.

The Gulgong Show is a not-for-profit organisation that hosts the annual Gulgong Agriculture Show each year. It started in 1888 as a modest gathering for farmers to display their produce, livestock, and skills. Over the decades, the show has evolved into a multi-faceted event however it remains anchored to its original purpose: celebrating the talents, hard work, and ingenuity of the rural community.

Moolarben Coal Acting General Manager, Tim Slater was proud to sponsor the show again in 2026.

“Shows and events like this, unite the community, bringing people together in a happy, safe and fun environment.

“The Gulgong Show also provides an excellent opportunity for local charity groups to fundraise and educate locals about their programs or services they deliver to the community.

“We are committed to playing an active role in the community and pleased our funding could go towards helping ensure this event was a success,” said Tim.
